

PADI Self-Reliant Diver

There are many reasons for wanting to become a self-reliant diver; you want to dive alone, you don't want to rely completely on your dive buddy or Divemaster, or you are interested in technical diving and you want to start thinking like a Tec. The most important thing you will learn is to know your personal limits by enrolling in a PADI Self-Reliant Diver course with Evasioni Blu Diving Ustica - Palermo (Sicily).

PADI Self - Reliant Diver Program

What you will learn during your PADI Self-Reliant Diver course

- The importance of the buddy system and therefore what it means to dive alone
- The potential risks and how to use techniques to reduce risks in diving alone
- The importance of equipment redundancy
- How to plan solo dives
- Gas consumption management (SAC rate)

The PADI Self-Reliant Diver course is divided into two main parts:

1. Knowledge development (individual and classroom study).
2. Three open water dives to practice self-sufficient diving skills and solve potential problems on your own.
